Cold Hands and Warm Hearts!

As the winter season approaches, our surroundings will be wrapped in cool and crisp air. Does that mean that we will lose our warmth? Certainly not, the warmth does not always come from the weather; it comes from within us. Simple words of appreciation, acts of kindness, or lending a helping hand warm our hearts no matter what the weather is. It is this care and compassion that we instil in our students that defines our school community.

The teamwork, empathy, and willingness to support their peers demonstrate the warmth in their hearts. We believe that imparting education is as much about nurturing values as it is about knowledge.

Let us be inspired to share warmth in this cold season through our actions. While we as teachers will create the environment where everyone will be supported and valued, we request our parents to also support us by balancing boundaries with warmth. A blend of kind discipline and parental love will surely help them grow into compassionate yet grounded individuals.

We need to just continue doing our bit, together; let us show that while our hands may be cold in this season, our hearts are always warm.

Wishing you all cosy, compassionate, and cheerful months ahead!

Festivals

Festivals are the most important part of our culture. absolute sparkling moments of happiness, togetherness, and celebration. These vibrant moments connect people with each other and remind us of our traditions and customs, and fill our lives with colour and cheerfulness. Behind the illuminating diyas, decorations, and festive spirit, there is a virtue that truly ennobles festivals. The real meaning of celebrating festivals is the virtue. When our heart is kind, gratitude, honesty, and respect for each other, the true spirit of the occasion is honoured. Celebration without virtue is futile; alongside virtue, they become expressions of love, harmony, and goodwill. Today, celebrations often focus on glamour and avariciousness. The significance of virtue is not only extravagance; it also nurtures the value of our traditions. A simple act of goodness can brighten a festival more than a thousand lights ever could. We should celebrate all festivals with pure intent, thoughts and a noble cause. It is not just the magnificence of the celebration but the virtue inside of us, that makes every festival memorable and special.
